The ADF&G is recruiting a Fishery Biologist I in Petersburg. The recruitment can be found on workplace Alaska. This position is 11-month seasonal and will be part of the groundfish project.

Duties include the following: biological sampling at fish processing plants; participation in groundfish stock assessment surveys, including sablefish longline and marking surveys and remote operated vehicle surveys to assess rockfish populations; author annual survey and fishery reports; analysis and summarization of fisheries data; review of video for habitat classification; management of groundfish databases, including editing, verifying, and querying data; answering fishermen questions on subsistence and commercial fishing in person and by phone; under the supervision of the project leader or fisheries biologist II, perform inseason fishery management, assist with authoring of board of fisheries proposals, and writing news releases and emergency orders.